A Study in Style

The home office is a workspace where you need to be productive, but it should also have sensational style, preferably sans stuffiness. "With a few smart design elements, the home office can serve as a functional workspace that doubles as a casual space for watching TV or accommodating additional guests," says Kira Krümm, KDG-Kira Krümm & Co., Naples. "When designing yours, first decide which activity is most important in the space, then prioritize the floor plan. If most of your time will be spent using the space for work and study, then invest in well-designed, built-in furniture."
